The National Keratoconus Foundation maintains a list of doctors who should be keratoconus contact lens savvy. I see no point in doing anything further if it doesn't improve my vision. Most of the eyes in this study show a moderate decrease and wear. Collagen crosslinking appears safe, but as it is a relatively new procedure, long-term experience is lacking. My vision has been stable over this time, and although I have minor discomfort, I can tolerate the RGP lenses. Designed for ophthalmologists and particularly for refractive surgeons, contact lens materials and lens designs, as well as surgical advances, have made and will continue to make a huge difference in our ability to manage patients with keratoconus.
