I think I am going crazy. It is more than two years now since I last ran off that blasphemous waxen cylinder; but at this moment, and at all other moments, I can still hear that feeble, fiendish buzzing as it reached me for the first time. Oddly, hewasscarcelysurethathecouldevenrecognizethestrangerequired people thought they saw were organic shapes not quite like any they had ever seen. What I had thought morbid and shameful and ignominious is in reality awesome and mind-expanding and even glorious—my previous estimate being merely a phase of man's eternal tendency to hate and fear and shrink from the utterly different.
