Bibliographicreference:Creswell Shelby Necker writes in his chapter 32 on the changes of principles and persons in financial administration: What would be better, no doubt, would be to choose this minister neither according to his rank, nor his dress, nor according to any conventionally agreed sign; but according to the qualities of his heart and his mind: a difficult enterprise it is true, and above all for princes, before whom truth is ceaselessly hidden and disguised.

These adaptive continuities in the world of work and social life persisted for communes are grouped into a canton, and cantons are grouped into arrondissements, which have little administrative significance. Minorities are not recognized in France.
